City Attorney Adkinson noted that it was inappropriate for Council to insert itself into the appeal process by adjudicating every adjustment claim that came before it, and that it would become extremely problematic as the city experienced growth. City Attorney Adkinson went on to suggesting that the appeal process be left up to the executive branch of the City, the Mayor and City Manager. Councilman Martin asked for clarification on the on the “once in a lifetime” language in the policy, which began the Council’s reexamination of the policy. Councilwoman Brannon noted that the “once in a lifetime” was inappropriate for the city due to the longevity of residency in the city. Parks and Recreation Director Simmons cautioned that residents would argue fairness and called for the policy to give parameters behind the nature of events that led to the need for an adjustment. City Attorney Adkinson recommended the policy having an adjustment to half of one high bill, proving that the circumstances were Councilwoman Brannon also wanted to know the rapport of issues with special events ordinances centering around the word “advertisement”. While in discussion the Council began to modify language within ordinance and made suggested changes.
